ACADEMIC REGALIA

The colorful costumes worn by the platform guests and faculty are called academic regalia. The use of caps, gowns and hoods in academia dates from medieval times. The overall appearance of the regalia changes as the wearer attains advanced degrees. The standard “mortar-board” style cap is uniform through all degrees with the tassel being black or the color of the wearer’s discipline. Faculty holding the doctorate degree may wear a velvet tam-o-shanter style cap instead of the “mortar-board” but in each case the tassel is shorter and gold. Bachelor’s degree holders wear a simple gown, closed at the front, with pointed sleeves. The master’s gown, worn open or closed, has sleeves that end in a curved pouch with an opening to free the wearer’s hands. The doctorate gown, which also may be worn open or closed, has large, puffy sleeves each with three horizontal velvet bars. The gown is faced with velvet around the neck and down the front. The velvet is either black or the color of the wearer’s discipline. The hood, worn hanging down the back, increases from 36 inches long in the bachelor’s to 48 inches long in the doctorate. The inside satin lining, often worn turned out, is in the colors of the wearer’s university. The velvet outside border of the hood is in the color of the wearer’s discipline. The disciplines represented at Shoreline Community College and their colors are listed below:
